Program Plan Development Instructions

In order to develop a Program Plan that represents the needs and strengths of your program, it is important to collect and review information in preparation for writing the plan. Sources of information include data on enrollment, success, or community need data.

Moreover, staff, faculty, and administrators should be given an opportunity to provide input into a plan. Additionally, student input might be valuable as well. Lastly, members of a community advisory board may also provide important information.

After collecting this input, a plan can be drafted and then again shared with the various members of the program for revision.

While this process might be more time-consuming, it will ultimately mean of more responsive and valid program plan that will better serve the mission of the college.
